The Porsche 997 was originally introduced in GTE (GT2) spec in 2007 and then was extensively modified the following year. One of the key areas reworked was the transmission, which was replaced in its entirety. Porsche engineers applied know how gained when developing the RS Spyder LMP2 to reduce internal friction and lighten the six-speed sequential unit. A flatter driveshaft angle increased the scope for teams to try different suspension setups. The suspension itself underwent a few revisions, retained Sachs four-way dampers. Few changes were made to the 3795cc six-cylinder boxer engine which produces 465bhp @ 8,000rpm and 430Nm of torque @ 7,250rpm. However, the most obvious updates were to the front -end aerodynamics, which in 2008 featured prototype style dive planes on the nose and new ducting. The package was designed to increase downforce and cut drag.
